THE MASTER PASSION.

Alleged to Be the Jania For Getting Free Passes For the Play:

"I was once present," said Charles Dickens, "at a social discussion which originated by chance. The subject was, What was the most absorbing and longest lived passion in the human breast? What was the passion so powerful that it would almost induce the generous to be mean, the careless to be cautious, the guileless to be deeply designing and the dove to emulate the serpent?' A daily editor of vast experience and great acuteness, who was one of the company, considerably surprised us by saying, getting orders for the play. There had recently been a terrible shipwreck, and very few of the surviving sailors had escaped in an open boat. "One of these on making land came straight to London and straight to the newspaper office with his story of how he had seen the ship go down before his eyes. That young man had witnessed the most terrible contention between the powers of fire and water for the destruction of that ship and of every one on board. He had rowed away among the floating dving and the sinking dead. He had floated by day, and he had frothe long line of eastern California coun- zen by night, with no shelter and no food, and as he told his dismal tale he rolled his haggard eyes about the room.

"When he had finished and the tale had been noted down from his tips, he was cheered and refreshed and soothed and asked if anything could be done for him. Even within him that master passion was so strong that he immediately replied that he should like an order for the play. My friend, the editor, certainly thought that was rather a strong case, but he said that during his many years of experience he had witnessed an incurable amount of self prostration and abasement having no other desert, as if to reflect the surrounding object and that almost invariably on the part of people who could well afford to
